

Sezen Ocak graduated and pursued post graduate studies completing her PhD on Animal Science (small ruminant production) at Cukurova University, Adana, Turkey. Her main research interests are small ruminant production, production systems, reproductive biotechnology, precision livestock farming and management. Over the past decade she has obtained funding for and has coordinated various research projects from different institutions. Since 2006 Dr. Ocak has realized numerous roles on various scientific and organizational committees of international conferences. As well as her multitude of publications on the topic she has also received many academic awards from the scientific and technological research council of Turkey. Presently she is involving in 3 H2020 projects as partner and 1 as a leading coordinator.